

In 1971, the Philippines participated in the Paris Biennale, which is dedicated to the young artists of the world. The Philippines sent in sober and formal works by mature artists, and as a result Philippine participation was out of step with the biennale's theme. The exception was Marciano Galang, who produced three long wooden bars simply but strikingly arranged.